DO THE PEOPLE RULE?

GOOD SCHOOLS.

Build Up a Community Make Better Children and Better Men And Women

To one who has always been interested in educational affairs and always anxious to see the standards of a community gradually rising, the idea of converting people to the belief that the graded school is superior to the ungraded school is very much like trying to convert them to the belief that three meals a day are better than one. It is possible for a person to subsist, more or less comfortably, on one meal a day but he does not do his best work that way. It is possible for a man to run a store by himself if the store is small enough and his commercial ambition low enough, but it will not be a particularly good store. Some people, of course, do not care for good stores. It is possible for a farmer to do all the work that is done on his farm but he is not the man to whom you will go for fine stock or for superior seed or plants. It will be a small farm run in a small way. It is also possible for a teacher to teach, after a fashion, all grades in one day, to allow ten minutes or sometimes fifteen or five to a recitation, but it is an inferior school that is so conducted, a necessarily inferior education that is received. And with the present, and increasing, demand for intelligent workers, the people who receive only this education are likely to remain inferior people.

The time of subduing the country, of clearing the land and fighting wild animals, the time, in short, when physical strength and clean commonsense were the only essentials, has gone by never to return; but the time of unfeeling business conditions, of getting the greatest return from a given effort, the time of matching brains with brains, is here to stay. And it is not hard to see what kind of person is going to succeed in the long run; it is the person whose mind has been trained to responsible and accurate work. No matter how good the brain, it needs training. No one would think of letting a Thoroughbred horse go without training because he is a Thoroughbred; he needs even more careful handling than the scrub horse. On the other hand, the scrub horse must not go untrained, for his value is increased by discipline. In human education physical strength should be sought for it is highly valuable, but physical strength is but weakness. Common sense is needed as much as it ever was more indeed than it ever was. And the surest evidence of common sense is recognition of present conditions and giving to the children the best possible equipments for the tasks before them. For that is the purpose of education to enable us to do our work better and to do a better kind of work.

One great work of the advancement of the present generation is the care for the children, the recognition that the welfare of the community and of the state is ultimately in their hands, and the determination to serve the community and the state by preparing the children for the work they have to do.

Consequently we have juvenile courts that the misdemeanors and sins of children may not become the crimes of men and women; we have child labor laws that the children may have a chance to be children for a few short years and thus acquire power for mature life; and we have better schools that they may not go to their life work handicapped by ignorance or deficient education. Indeed a person's patriotism may well be tested by his attitude toward the rights of children. To refuse to work for better schools is to confess oneself lacking in patriotism. To oppose or to be indifferent to good schools, even on the ground that one has no children of his own, is to announce oneself a poor citizen. To deprive a child of the best education a community can give him is to defraud him of right. Fraud is vile enough in any form but fraud practiced upon a defenseless child, handicapping him for life, is about the smallest, lowest form. There are people who object to graded schools on the ground that they are useless luxuries. Not much can be said to such people though not because there is nothing to be said. There are people who have the same objection to toothbrushes. Of course graded schools mean increased cost, they ought to. Where is the sense, or the morality of trying to get a good thing without paying for it? Personally I have no desire to be a pauper, to live off the community and give nothing in return. But the increased cost of graded schools is more than offset by the increased benefits to the community, the higher intellectual standard, the consequent higher social standard, and, as always follows, the higher commercial standard. Good schools attract good people to a community; good people make good business and good social conditions. The increased amount of taxes for a graded school is, by most people, spent many times over for pure luxuries and no thought given to the expenditure. Why not pay it for a necessity and so give the children of Breckenridge county, Kentucky a fair chance with the children from other counties and other states?

Obituary

Sophia Ann Elizabeth Bryant Ne Meador was born in Indiana May 8, 1836, and passed into the life beyond on Friday, Kansas, last Sunday morning, aged 72 years, 4 months and 18 days. The funeral was held at the home of her son Emmett Bates, eight miles north of Sylvia at 3 p. m. on Monday, September 21, and was conducted by Rev. I. A. Bartholomew of Sylvia.

Though born in Indiana, Mrs. Meador spent most of her life in Kentucky. She was married first to Mr. Hall by whom she became the mother of seven children, four of whom are living. After his death she married Mr. Bates and became the mother of three more children, two of whom are living, viz. Ben Bates who formerly lived in Sylvia, but now at Sterling, and Emmett Bates, who resides north of Sylvia. Of those present at her funeral were four sons, viz. J. L. and S. G. Hall and Ben and Emmett Bates. Her aged husband and companion for 24 years, J. D. Meador, was also present, and four grandchildren, Otis and Sadie Durkee of New Albany, Indiana, and Lafayette and Frank Hall of Sterling. Dan Meador of Abbeville and Ruth Meador wife of Nickerson. Interment took place in the Reno cemetery.

Mrs. Meador was a woman of strong personality and indomitable will. Too much of care and suffering had been her lot, yet she was uncomplaining.

She was strong and vigorous until stricken with apoplexy one week before her demise. The sympathy of all the neighbors and friends goes out to the stricken husband and children.

Mrs. Meador was the daughter of a Baptist minister and was converted and joined the Baptist church at 15 years of age and continued in that faith during her long and useful life.

AT HARDINSBURG.

Nicholas Sheeran Died Suddenly At His Home Wednesday Court Adjourned Saturday--Personal Notes.

OTHER INTERESTING ITEMS.

Nicholas Sheeran expired at his home near Kirk at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning, October 28. Sometime ago his recovery was doubtful, but he had improved until he was able to walk about the house. On July 4th he was taken ill of typhoid fever. The fever left him with a troublesome abscess necessitating two or three operations, which it was hoped, would save his life. Mr. Sheeran had about five years ago married Miss Marcella Burch, daughter of J. O. Burch. To their union were born two children. The wife and children survive. The deceased was an industrious, hard working farmer, living on the old Sheeran homestead of almost a thousand acres. He was prosperous, well-to-do, honest and an honored man in his community. He was a brother of Pete, Dennis and Pat Sheeran, well-known citizens and business men of the county. The Rev. Father Thomas preached the funeral at St. Romuald's cemetery, in the presence of a large concourse of relatives and friends. Relatives from a distance who attended the funeral services were J. O. Burch, of Illinois; Nicholas Powers, of Indianapolis; Charlie Mannion, of Henderson, and Dennis and Andrew Meagher, of Louisville.

Father Brey And "Tip."

"Tip" is just a common, very ordinary yellow dog, small in size and very pleasant in disposition, but he has a happy faculty, probably an instinct, of remembering former masters, and thereby hangs this tale. The dog was owned, up until eighteen months ago, by Father Brey, the well-known priest, but for some reason he strayed away or was stolen, and Father Brey could get no line on his whereabouts. In the meantime the dog fell into the hands of another and was given to the little son of Mr. J. A. Rise, who resides several miles back of Havensville. And you should have seen that little dog at the Havensville depot one day last week. He was in town with his new master, when Father Brey stepped from the train. "Tip" at once abandoned his new master and ran to the old man, and the way the dog manifested his knowledge of the former owner made it quite unmistakable that the dog had been found.—Hancock Clarion.

"It isn't necessary. I've had a change of heart in the last minute. Mr. Bansemer. I withdraw my proposition. By all that's holy, I intend to go after you now without pity. Hang your son's feelings! You won't take my advice. I didn't give it as a friend, because I detest you. It was done in a weak spirit of falter toward your son and toward the girl he is to marry. Now, I put them out of my consideration. They!"

"Get out!" Harbert, very red in the face, slammed the door after him and strode angrily through the outer office into the corridor. Droom immediately entered the consultation room.

"Well! What is it?" demanded Bansemer.

"What did he want?"

"He invited me to go to Europe for an indefinite stay. I refused. Well, right it out, Droom. We have covered our trail better than he thinks. They can't convict me. I'm sure of that. They have nothing but conjectures, and they won't go in court."

"I'm afraid of him, just the same. You're built headed about it. Every criminal thinks his tracks are covered until it is too late to cover them properly."

"Curse you, Droom; I'm no criminal." "A slip of the tongue on my part. Do you know who is down there in Rigby's office with those fellows?"

"An officer, I dare say."

"No; David Cable."

"Cable? Then his wife has told him everything. Well, I've something to tell too. By the Lord Harry, Elias, there will be several sensations in high life."

"You don't mean that you'll tell all there is to tell about the girl?"

"No, that's just it! That is one thing I won't tell. If you tell those blood she has in her veins, I'll kill you like a dog. But I'll see that Miss Cable is dropped by Chicago society inside of a week. I'm mad, Droom—do you understand?"

"But Graydon loves her."

"He won't love her long. I was a fool to let him go this far—a blind, loving fool. But I'll end it now. He shan't marry her. He has no—"

"I haven't much of a heart to boast of, Bansemer, but I hope you not to do this thing. I love Graydon. He doesn't deserve any pain or disgrace. Take my advice and leave the city. Let me call Harbert back."

"Not! They can't drive me out! Telephone over and ask Graydon to stop here on his way up this afternoon."

The opening and closing of the outer door attracted their attention. Droom peeped forth. In spite of himself, Bansemer started and his eyes widened with sudden alarm. A glance of apprehension passed between the two men.

"It's that Deever boy from Judge Smith's," reported Droom.

"Tell him to get out," said Bansemer, with a breath of relief.

"I thought it might have been"— began Droom with a wry grin.

"Nonsense!"

"It is a bit too soon. They haven't had time."

As Droom left the room Bansemer crossed to the window and looked down into the seething street far below. He saw that his hand trembled, and he tried to laugh at his weakness. For a long time he stood there, his eyes seeing eyes focused on the hurrying masses, his ears alert for unusual sounds from the outer office.

"If it were not for Graydon, I was in a muttering between set teeth. 'God, how I hate to have him know!'"

Droom had told Eddie Deever to "get out," but Eddie was there to talk and he talked to, so he failed to take the hint.

"Say, I haven't seen you since you played the hero up in the fashionable part of town. Gee, that was a stunner! I'll bet old man Cable rewards you in some way. What's your theory about the holdup?"

Droom looked up sharply. For the first time there about in the city of Chicago, he thought that the breezy boy might be a spy.

"I haven't any," he replied shortly. He was trying to remember if he had ever said anything incriminating to the boy.

"How'd you happen to be over there just at that time?"

"I haven't time to talk about it. Please don't bother me. It happened three days ago, and I've really forgotten about it. Don't throw that cigarette into the wastebasket. Haven't you any sense?"

"Gee! You don't suppose I'm going to throw it away, do you? There's half an inch of it left. Not me! Say, I've heard your boss has quite a case on Mrs. Cable. How about it?" He almost whistled this.

"Did you see his face?"

"What are you, bub—a detective?"

"Roose Keeting says I'd make a better policeman than lawyer. She's sore at me for taking Miss Throckmorton to Mam' Gall's the other night. Fellow stood on the piano and sang the dearest song I've ever heard. But, court, I don't think Miss Throck was on. She didn't seem to notice, I mean. Say, on the dead, do you think you could identify that fellow?"

"I hope so, but if any one ever asks you whether I'd know that man's face if I saw it again just say that I'd know it in a thousand. I saw it plainly."

Eddie gulped suddenly and looked more interested than ever.

"Do you think they'll get him?"

"They will if he talks too much."

"What's that?"

"I'm not making a patent. I'm making a model. It's nearly completed."

The outer door opened suddenly, and an old gentleman entered.

"Is Mr. Bansemer here?" he asked, removing his silk hat nervously.

"Yes, Mr. Watts. I'll tell him you are here."

Watts, the banker, confronted Bansemer a moment later, an anxious, hunted look in his eyes. John Watts was known as one of the men of the city. No one had bested him in a transaction of any kind. As hard as nails and as treacherous as a dog, he was feared alike by man and woman.

Watts, perhaps for the first time in his self-satisfied life, was ready to bow knee to a fellow man. A certain young woman had fallen into the skillful hands of Counselor James Bansemer, and Mr. Watts was jerked up with a firmness that staggered him.

"Mr. Bansemer, I have come in to see if this thing can't be settled between us. I don't want to go into court. My wife and daughters would understand that it's a case of blackmail on the part of this woman. Let's come to terms."

Bansemer smiled coolly. It was impossible to resist the temptation to toy with him for awhile, to humble and humiliate this man who had destroyed hundreds in his juggernaut ride to riches. Bansemer drew the old man out. He saw the beads of perspiration on his brow and heard the whine come from his voice. Then in the end he sharply changed his tactics.

"See here, Watts, you've got a wrong impression of this affair. I don't like your inferences. I am not asking you for a cent. I wouldn't take it. You have just offered me $25,000 to stop the affair. That's an insult to my integrity. I've investigated this girl's claim pretty thoroughly, and I believe she is trying to fleece you. I have given up the case. None of that sort of thing for me. She'll go to some unscrupulous lawyer, no doubt, but I am out of it. I don't handle that kind of business. You have invited me. Get out of my office, sir, and never enter it again."

"Give me that in writing," began the wily banker, but Bansemer had called for Droom. Eddie Deever was standing near the door, almost doggedly curious.

"Show Mr. Watts the door, and if he ever comes here again call the police. He has tried to bribe me."

Watts departed in a dazed sort of way, and Droom closed the door.

"Are you still here?" he demanded of Eddie Deever in such a manner that the young man lost no time in leaving.

"There goes $25,000," said Bansemer, with a cold grin.

"I guess you can afford to lose it," muttered Droom.

"I suppose, but it's probably too late to help."

"Have you telephoned to Graydon?"

"Not yet."

"Change of heart?"

"Change of mind."

"That's so. You haven't any heart."

One day passed slowly, but late in the afternoon the suspense became so keen that he found it difficult to keep himself from making inquiries of the proper officials as to whether affidavits had been filed by Harbert or any other person. His hand did not shake now, but there was a steady pain at the back of his head.

"Droom, I think I'll go home. If I don't appear in the morning you'll know I'm at some police station. Good day!"

"Goodby," said Elias, with correcting emphasis. Bansemer laughed heartily.

"I believe you'd like to see me judge."

"Not unless you could be convicted. I'll have to remain in your employ until then, I suppose."

"I've often wondered why you don't quit of your own accord—it seems so distasteful to you."

"I'm working for you from force of habit."

"I don't think state's evidence if I'm arrested, no doubt."

"If my word counted for anything," and he raised his hand, "I'd say, 'So help me—I shan't!'"

"I've never been able to understand you."

"I guess you've always understood my feelings toward you."

"You hate me?"

"I'm no exception to the rule."

"But hang you, you're faithful."

"Oh, I'll pay for it, never fear. You won't hesitate to sacrifice me if it will help you in any way. But I'll help you in some way. Elias Droom has been smart enough to cover every one of his tracks, even if he hasn't been able to cover yours. I can't perform miracles. You don't seem as keen to bring about the family explosion as you were, I observe."

"By heaven, I can't bear the thought of that boy—oh, well, close up the office as soon as you like."

After he was safely out of the office Elias Droom glided into the private office, drew forth his bunch of keys and opened his employer's desk. A big revolver lay in the top drawer. The old clerk quickly removed the five cartridges and as deftly substituted a new set of them in their stead. The new ones were minus the explosive power. He grinned as he replaced the weapon and closed the desk. Dropping the cartridge into his coat pocket, he returned to his own desk, chuckling as he set to work on his papers.

"I won't betray him to the law, but I'll tell you so that he can't escape it in that way."

Bansemer's man informed him upon his arrival home that Mr. Graydon would not be in for dinner. He had left word that Mrs. Cable was very much improved and that he and Miss Cable were going out for a long drive—in aansom. It was his intention to dine with Mr. and Mrs. Cable very informally.

Bansemer sat in sullen silence for a long time trying to read. A fierce jealousy was growing in his heart. It was gradually dawning upon him that the Cables had alienated his son's affections to no small degree. The fear grew upon him that Graydon ultimately would go over to him, forgetting his father in the love for the girl. Resentment, strong and savage, flooded his heart. He could eat no dinner. He was full of curses for the fate which forced him to dine alone while his son was enjoying with people whom he was beginning to hate with a fervor that pained him. Jealousy, envy, malice, fired his blood.

He went out and bought the evening papers. The thought came to him that Graydon had heard the stories and was deliberately staying away from him. Perhaps the Cables had been talking to him.

"By heaven," he grated as he paused in front of his home, "if she's turned him against me I'll turn her out of anything but a paradise for her. What a fool I've been to wait so long! I've given her the chance to tell her side of the case first. She's made the first impression. What could I have been thinking of? Droom was right. I should have demanded less of her. A started off swiftly through the night toward the Cable home. He had no special object in view; it was simply impossible for him to conquer the impulse to be near his son. Like a thief he lurked about the street in the vicinity of Cable's house, standing in the shadows, crossing and recrossing the street many times, always watching the lighted windows with hateful eyes. It was after 8 o'clock, and the night was damp with the first breath of spring. There was a slight chill in the air, but he did not feel it, although he was without an overcoat.

The lights on the second floor, he knew, were in Mrs. Cable's room. In his mind's eye he could see Graydon there with the others listening to the story as it fell from prejudiced, condemning lips—the pathetic, persuasive lips of a sick woman. He knew the effect on the chivalrous nature of his son; he could feel the coldness that took root in his boy's heart.

A light came to begin to blow in his face as he paced back and forth along the short block in which the Cables lived. He was working his imagination up to a state bordering on frenzy.

In his fancy he could hear Graydon cursing him in the presence of his accusers. At the end of the street he could see the break in the sea wall where Cable and his wife had met, and he could not help wishing that Droom had not pulled her from the water. Then he found himself wondering if they had told Jane the story of her husband. The hope that she would still be delighted flashed through him; it would give him a chance for sweet revenge.

He confessed to himself that he was reckless. The transactions of the past few days had left him at the edge of the abyss. He recognized his peril, but could not see beyond his own impulses.

"I believe I'll do it," he was muttering to himself as he paused across the street.

AN EPISODE OF WAR.

The Only Coward Evans Ever Saw in the Naval Service.

After Admiral Evans had been so grievously wounded in the attack on Fort Fisher during the civil war he was picked up by a marine named Wasmouth and carried into comparative shelter. Wasmouth was killed a few minutes later. Evans' own account continues: "After Wasmouth was killed I soon fell asleep, and when I awoke it was some time before I could recall my surroundings. The tide had come in, and the hole in which I was lying was nearly full of water, which had about covered me and was trickling into my ears. I could see a monitor firing and apparently very near, and the thought came to me that I could swim off to her if I only had a bit of plank or driftwood."

Wasmouth said this could not be done, and that I should soon be drowned like a rat in a hole unless I managed to get out somehow. Dead and wounded men were lying about in ghastly piles, but no one to lead me a helping hand. By this time I could not use my legs in any way, and when I dug my hands into the sides of my prison and tried to pull myself up, I found I gave way and lay still lying in the water. Finally I made a strong effort and rolled myself sideways out of the hole.

When I got out I saw a marine at short distance away nicely covered by a pile of sand and firing away deliberately at the fort. I called to him to pull me in behind his bar of sand, but he declined on the ground that the fire was too sharp for him to expose himself. I persuaded him with my revolver to change his mind, and in two seconds he had me in a place of safety—to say the least, as far as the firing, for when he fired the Confederate bullets would snip the sand within a few inches of our heads. If the marine reached his revolver, I was looking wet and could not possibly be fired. I suppose I would have been buried the next morning, as many other poor fellows were. As soon as I could reach some cartridges from a dead sailor lying near me I loaded my revolver, thinking it might be useful before the job was finished.

When I was jerked in behind this pile of sand I landed on the body of the only coward I ever saw in the naval service. At first I was not conscious that there was a man under me, but he suddenly came to work himself into the sand. He was actually below the surface of the ground. The monitors were firing over us, and as a shell came roaring by he pulled his knees up to his chin, which he held as tightly as my broken legs. I said: "Hello! Are you wounded?" "No, sir," he replied; "I'm afraid to move." "All right, then," I said, "keep quiet and don't hurt my legs again. The next shot that comes over he did the same thing and the next notwithstanding my repeated cautions. So I tapped him bet on the count of three, and out of my revolver, and he was quiet after that."

THE ACT OF DYING.

Reasons For Believing That It is an Easy Matter.

The mere ultimate process of dying may be a relatively easy matter. Any person who has been long ill probably suffers more on this given day of his life than he will suffer in the act of departing from his body. It is probable that a broken bone, a delicious fever, a disordered vital organ, may cause more agony than the final struggle. I have my doubts whether the last pang is as bad as it seems, declares Elizabeth Stuart Phelps in Harper's Bazar. We are told by surgeons that chloroform patients may give apparent evidence of acute agonies which they do not feel. Death itself is often an anaesthetic so merciful that what people call "dying trouble" is obviously worse matter.

I, for instance, who have never fainted and never been anaesthetized in my life, have twice become from serious causes unconscious, and I have given apparent evidence of acute agonies which they do not feel. Death itself is often an anaesthetic so merciful that what people call "dying trouble" is obviously worse matter.

CHAPTER XIX.

BANSEMER was not losing his courage; it was only the dread of having Graydon come back out. He stood close to his office, seeing but few people. However, he did saunter into Rigby's office for a friendly chat, but learned nothing from the young man but that he was still in the city.

With a boldness that astonished himself and he was at no time timid—he asked if Harbert intended to remain in Chicago for the month of time.

IN FASHION'S REALM

Paris Has Larger Hats in Store For America.

ROSES THE BIGGEST EVER.

New Year Smart New York Women Are Wearing This Winter—Director's Gown Has Been National Costume of Burma For Centuries.

Paris milliners say that American women have never seen the really large hat. Well, if we haven't had an opportunity of observing the genuine article the imitations vouchsafed us this season have done much toward making the amende honorable. The modistes of gay Paree doubtless are merely waiting for a ship to be built large enough to accommodate their cargo. Then picture to yourself the scene when the custom officers first sight them. "Madam, is this a new ship?" Curtain.

Seriously, though, the other day I wanted to halt a Fifth avenue bus, but simply couldn't make the driver see me on account of a barricade of hats that made the crossing look like a particularly fine patch of extra large mushrooms. Every woman in that crowd seemed to have affected as her piece of headgear one of the huge new mushroom shapes swathed in folds of silk, velvet or tulle held in place with a buckle about the size of an old-fashioned door knocker. Now, you'll be proposing me as a member of the Knockers' club, but really the big hats of the year are the lilies. Their only saving grace is flatness. And the roses that trim some of these chapeaux! Talk about nature fakes! Why, the manufacturers of the present artificial roses, with its unlearned dimensions, have the former microscans to be very slinky—stung to death. There is a stunning hat called the Marie Louise, an enormous, round, floppy affair that depends upon one of these roses, with foliage of an unnatural pink color, as its only adornment.

It is a case of where's the face when a woman dons one of these hats. And her hair? Yes, it's all there, bolstered out with "rails" and curls galore, but in eclipse. The moon has come into conjunction with Venus! Up to date astronomy!

The smartest women in town are wearing the new neck ruffs, admirably described by a friend of mine as "a little bit of anything or a mixture of all." The fur neckbands mean visits later on to the "top specialists." But who cares for that if they have a made piece of fur they can convert into one of these dressy accessories! All that is necessary to bring it up to the question. Then at the top, and, if one desires it, at the bottom also, is placed quilted ribbon, chiffon or net matching the belt. The neckband hooks in the back under a huge bow of ribbon. Very attractive, too, are the collars of black chiffon edged at the top with a line of ostrich feather banding.

One could keep on writing endlessly about the neckwear, but I really must tell you about a collar of ermine made by a clever girl who has more brains than money. This young lady had an ermine muff that had survived her infantile days in a good state of preservation. This pelt she determined to make into one of the new neckbands. With this end in view she cut a paper pattern of a collar whose shape was similar to that of the old storm affair that stood up high and close in the back and sloped down in front. This modern collar, though, crossed in front in tiny laps like the velvet ribbon one we saw at one's neck. The pattern was laid on the skin side of the ermine and cut with a sharp razor, allowing for a slight turning in. Edging the collar all around was an inch wide quilting of black satin ribbon, and at the top, extending a little beyond the black, peeped a kitting of gold tissue and above this a quilting of creamy lace. The effect was charming and French to a degree, and all for the price of the trimming and a little white satin used for the lining. Doesn't this idea suggest possibilities of other neckbands to you?

I reckon it wouldn't be up to date for a fashion scribe not to mention something "in the director's style." But who said the director gown was new? It's about three centuries old, and these figures are conservative. It recently came to light that Parisiennes borrowed the sheath gown idea from Burma, where it has been the national costume for centuries. One hears, too, that in the Orient, as in America, the sheath skirt, opening at the side, is losing favor and the closed jupe is coming into popularity. In fact, the director gown is being brought down to the simplicity of the tailored frock.

At a matinee last Saturday a young society matron was wearing with her mauve crepe de chine gown a director coat of black satin lined with violet ottoman silk. The coat was cut up at the sides, and one caught fascinating glimpses of the colored lining. The same shade of mauve was repeated in the fringes of the large black silk hat. This reminded me of an idea of the season.

or a fern is seen in the illustration. The basket is colored a dull bronze green. A well grown maidenhair fern of a very light green shade fitted in a basket of this description looks uncommonly well on a breakfast table and is so much more novel than the ordinary china flowerpot. The coloring of the basket being so artistic, care should always be taken to have fresh green moss tastefully placed on the top of the basket. These trifles add so much to the general effect.

Tools For Sewing Room.

No one can accomplish good results in any kind of work if she has not the proper tools with which to work. If the sewing room is furnished neatly and comfortably twice the amount of work can be accomplished. One of the absolute necessities for every sewing room is a small kitchen table painted white. Into the drawer may be put scissors, chalk, tape measures and other small articles that are indispensable in the sewing room. This table can be used to lay the goods on while cutting out garments, and it will be found a great help when it comes to busting seams and hems of skirts and other garments.

The sewing room should be furnished with a low chair for use when at the sewing machine, as a high chair is most uncomfortable, making one lean over and strain the back. A large mirror also is necessary, for when one is fitting one's own clothes this will be found most convenient. A great many steps will be saved if a roomy waste-basket, a dustpan and broom are also kept handy.

Care of the Hands.

This is the time of year to commence taking care of the hands to make them less susceptible to chapping, etc. Each night before retiring rub into the hands some cold cream (lard will do as well) to remove all the grime that may have accumulated during the day. Remove the cream that has not been absorbed by the pores and wash thoroughly with plenty of soap and water. Then rub into the hands all the glycerine and rose-water that will chafe the

A LINGUISTIC ESCAPEDE.

When Henry W. Longfellow Shocked Intellectual Boston.

In the original impression of Longfellow's poem of "Hilaritha" there were found in the seventh book to three lines following:

Strait into the river Rensselaer Plunged as if he were a dove.

How this offending phrase passed the proofreader without protest is one of those mysteries which have never been revealed. But the form error made its appearance and can still be found in copies of the poem which were regularly published and sold. Boston never received such a shock since the days when Fenimore Cooper insisted that it was only in the middle states that the English language was spoken in its purity. But that attack came from an outsider. Here the offender was of our own household, was, in fact, her favorite son. What means of suppression were resorted to will probably never be disclosed. A mysterious reticence has always been preserved in regard to this linguistic escapade. The biographers of Longfellow appear to be silent upon the subject. Measures of some sort must, however, have been taken at once. "Dove" was expunged, and the decorous "dived" assumed its place, and the whole transaction was so completely hushed up that no public scandal was created. Let him who possesses a copy of that first impression continue to cherish it. Whatever may be its worth now, the time will come when it will reach the value of the virtuous woman of Scripture, and its price will be far above rubies.—Professor Thomas R. Lounsbury in Harper's Magazine.

THE PALACE WAITED.

A Suggestion That Changed the Plans of a Pope.

At a time when there was great suffering among the people from lack of food and when famine in its worst form was threatening Pope Alexander VI. had made arrangements for the erection of a magnificent palace. The best architects had been employed, and the plans had been submitted and accepted, and an accomplished builder had been sent for to come from Venice, a man whose work had won for him renown and who was known to be a just and upright man.

The builder had arrived, and at an appointed time he waited upon his holiness to receive the plans and make his estimates. "There is one thing yet to be done," said the pope, "and that is to have no proper inscription or legend thought of to be placed over the main entrance of the palace. It should be put above the great gate. Do you think of an inscription that would be appropriate?"

"If your holiness would pardon me for the liberty, I might suggest one most appropriate at this time," said the pope, smiling. "Now, what shall it be?"

"Sovereign pontiff, let it be this: 'Command that these stones, be made bread!'"

The pope was visibly and deeply affected. He paid the builder munificently for his expenses of coming and going, and instead of building his palace he fed the hungry ones of his children.

Poverty Has Its Advantages.

A man on the wane of life observes that poverty has advantages and adversity its uses. If you are poor you can wear out your old clothes. You are exempt from calls. You are not troubled with many visitors. Boredom does not disturb you. Spongers do not haunt your tables. Brass bands do not serenade you. No one thinks of presenting you with a testimonial. No storekeeper irritates you by asking you, "Is there anything I can do for you?" Begging letter writers do not bother you. Flatterers do not flatter you. You are saved many debts and many a deception. And, lastly, if you have a true friend in the world you are sure to know it in a short space of time by him not deserting you.—Huntsville (Tex.) The Origin of a Miserable Joke.

Confucius had just met William Penn at one of Cleopatra's 5 o'clock teas. "William Penn?" he said. "William Penn? Seems to me I have heard of you, sir." "Yes," said Penn, with a pleased smile. "I am the man who was knighted by the sword." "Ah, yes," said Confucius. "You are also the man who invented sleep, are you not?" "No," said Penn; "I founded Philadelphia." "Oh, yes," said Confucius. "I knew it was something of that kind."—Success Magazine.

A MEMORY OF THE PAST.

The Unlikely Thing That Came With the Little Red Scarf.

"I was wearing the other day what one might call a very nice piece of pleasure in the world," said the village deacon, "and to go back a long way—clear back into the thirteenth century—about 1300, I recall it. It was a scarf I found in my stocking one bright Christmas morning. I got a red one, and my brother got a blue one. I was a boy and my brother was a man. I trudged downtown with that red scarf around my neck. I wore it every day until the birds began to sing in the springtime and the kids were busting up their marbles. I don't now remember who gave it to me nor what because of it, but I do know that the memory of it still clings like a benediction."

"Since the days of that little red scarf I have had things of far more intrinsic value. I have worn lodge emblems of high degree; I have had a gold watch and chain. I once had a pair of shoes that cost $5 and a necktie that cost twice as much as the little red scarf. Nay, more, I once tackled a pig but. But among these things do I recall none that gave me such genuine and unfeigned pleasure, such a swelled up feeling, as did that little red scarf way back in the days when the wolf ran off in the roads and howled. 'Tis the little red scarf days that stir my memory 't might have been.'—Osborn (Kan.) Farmer.

PLAIN JOHN SMITH.

How His Name Changes In Various Parts of the World.

John Smith—plain John Smith—is not very high sounding; it does not suggest aristocracy; it is not the name of any hero in the annals of fiction, and yet it is good, strong and honest. Transferred to other languages, it seems to climb the ladder of respectability. Thus in Latin it is Johannes Smithus; in Italian it becomes Giovanni Smithi; the Spaniards render it Juan Smith; the Dutchman adopts it as Hans Schmidt; the French flatten it out into Jean Smet, and the Russian sneezes and harks Jonoff Smithowski. When John Smith gets into the tea trade in Canton he becomes Yuan Shihmit; if he clambers about Mount Hecia, the islanders say he is John Smith; if he trades among the Tuscans he becomes Ton Qu Smitha; in Poland he is known as Jan Schmittewski; should he wander over the Volga he maintains the title of Ilhon Schmidt; when he goes to Mexico he is booked as Jontli Smithi; if of classic turn and he lingers among Greek ruins he turns to his limit then in Barker he is utterly disguised as Yoe Seef—Phonological Journal.

Mystery of a Cookbook.

Somebody mentioned cookbooks. "It takes a good deal to make me wonder," said the publisher, "but I received a jolt in the culinary line the other day that set me thinking. It was a good example of a cookbook that had been submitted for my approval. I was struck by this introduction to many of the recipes, 'Good for boarding house tables.' Now, why that discrimination? Isn't anything that is good enough for a boarding house table good enough for any other table, and isn't anything that is good enough for any other table good enough for a boarding house table? Judging by the way those particular recipes read, they may result in some rather tasty dishes. Then they limit them to boarding houses."—New York Globe.

His Successor.

Shortly after the death of one of England's greatest poets a devoted admirer of his visited the little Westmorland villages where the poet had lived and died to gaze reverently at his limit then in Barker he is utterly disguised as Yoe Seef—Phonological Journal.

Seeing an old man a native of the village, the stranger entered into conversation with him, remarking sadly on the death of the poet, to which the old man answered kindly and encouragingly.

"Aye, yes, still I nank 'n doob but t' wife 'll carry the business on."

Brief and Pithy.

An American justice has quoted the charge to a jury delivered by a certain Judge Donovan as the shortest on record. The judge said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, if you believe the plaintiff had no right to the plaintiff and fix the amount. If you believe the defendant find a verdict for defendant. Follow the officer."

But an English periodical casts this brief charge by quoting a shorter one delivered by Commissioner Kerr. He said to a jury:

"That man says prisoner robbed him. The prisoner says he didn't. You settle it."

Plagiarism.

At the literary club a sympathetic crowd surrounded the humorist, whose house had been robbed.

"They cleaned out everything," said the man—"everything, but, thank goodness, they didn't touch from my desk the manuscript column of jokes for next week's paper."

"Perhaps they knew," suggested a southeaster cynically, "that the jokes were already in the paper."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

"I have just found out about the woman opposite me after two years of mystery and anxiety," said the fat dweller. "She is a party, a very pretty woman with a white complexion who sits at her window half of her time doing nothing. She has a boy of about ten. Her life seemed so simple and still I didn't see how she lived. Evidently she didn't support a husband, but who supported her? The thing worried me, but last night I found how it was. Her husband is a violin player who plays all night long at some concert hall and sleeps the living day. I'd rather work for my living than keep the house quiet for a husband who has to sleep all day, then gets up just at the time you want to go out for a little rollicking and plays the violin somewhere."—New York Press.

Gathering Roses.

I've gathered roses and the like in many glad and golden June, but now, as down the world I hike, my weary hands are filled with prunes. I've gathered roses o'er and o'er, and some were white and some were red, but when I took them to the store the grocer wanted eggs for 'em. I gathered roses long ago in other days, in other scenes, and people said, "You ought to go and dig the weeds out of your yards." Gaddie's gone a gadding.

No more "Bills" to play on.

A slice of relief will go up this morning from every true American heart.

Business is going to boom from now on. Get on the band wagon and help it along.

The happy ones who ever they be this morning ought to sympathize with the sorrowing.

The people who saved the country yesterday were not good Democrats or good Republicans, but were good American citizens.

No money or whiskey or buying of votes in yesterday's election. Isn't this something to be proud of in old Breckenridge. Do the people rule?

Richard Stites, the younger, and a chip off the old block has been promoted to Traveling Passenger Agent on the Henderson Route. Richard is a very deserving young railroad man and his friends are all glad of his promotion.

It is all over. Now let us one and all get right down to business and talk better times and more prosperity. Whether Taft or Bryan we've all got to live and more, do something. Whoever wins is our President and it is our duty as good citizens and good Americans to help him and aid him in being a good President.

A young man from this county who is going to school at Lexington said to the News. "If I had had a good high school to have attended at home I could have completed my course here in two years whereas it will take me four years." Here is a practical demonstration of what good schools at home do for our boys who want to complete their education away from home. There ought to be a high school in every district in this county. By the way we want to call the attention of our readers to a splendid article along these lines printed in this issue. What we want and need badly in this county are more and better schools. No better investment for your money than in good schools.

Mr. Jno. D. Babbage,
Cloveport, Ky.

My Dear Mr. Babbage:

I want to thank you for your very kind letter to my Secretary, during my absence.

A kind word from Home means a great deal to the fellow who is fighting life's battle in other communities among strangers.

The fact that some one at Home is proud of the success and achievement of the boy from home, is a constant stimulus towards better things.

However successful I may be in life, I shall always feel that "The Breckenridge News" has been a vital factor in that success, by its loyalty to those young men, who thru stress of circumstances must go out into the world.

The "Home Paper" today is a most important factor in building up the character and good Citizenship of the community it serves-- it reaches the people as no other publication or method can hope to do.

I wish you and the "News" many more years of prosperity and successful work.

October 15th.

Yours very truly,

GEO. P. DEAN.

MR. OGLESBY WRITES

About A. S. of E. National Meeting at Milwaukee Society On Its Feet Again.

I am home from Milwaukee from attending National A. S. of E. Convention. There was not the slightest friction or discord and it looks now like national troubles are over. The meeting was well attended and delegates seemed in earnest and to mean business. It seems now we are on our feet and the order will now go forward to complete success with a new set of officers chosen. C. O. Drayton, of Ill, was elected President and S. D. Kump of Urice Sect. There was an effort to raise fees and dues but were left to now giving each State privilege of raising as they saw fit.

Now as to dues for this year, will say to all delinquents as have not been receiving paper regular. Remit $1.10 to S. B. Robertson, Calhoun, or to our County Sec. Mr. Miller, which amount of dues goes to the paper, as our locals are not meeting expenses. I ask each and every member to attend to this and send in immediately as we are very much in need of funds at headquarters. There is not a farmer, in the County in nor out of order, has not received benefits and knows advantage of organization and can easily send in small dues, and he also knows cannot carry on work at headquarters without money.

E. B. Oglesby.

Barn Raising In Texas.

A farmer near Goliad had a novel experience. A few years ago he built a small barn, and in the construction used green willow posts at the corners and along the sides. For some time nothing unusual was noticed, but after a year he saw that where he had laid the floor near the ground it was three feet above the soil. He discovered that the willow posts, instead of being dead, were alive, had taken root and were growing. In their upward movement they had carried the barn along. Last spring the barn was on stilts nine feet high, and he put in a new floor and surrounded the posts with siding, thereby making a two story affair. There is now a space of nine inches between the floor and the ground, and the owner expects to have a three story barn in the course of time. --Goliad Guard.

Building New Homes.

O. B. Mattingly returned from Garfield Monday where he has been at work on a new dwelling for Hawkins Smith.

Ollie Lyons is building a neat little cottage in Garfield on railroad street. Jonas Lyons and Worland Carter, Irvington, have recently built fine new barns on their places.

A Tiny Baby

can't tell you in words what the trouble is but it's complexion gets pasty, if it gets weaker and weaker, loses flesh and is cross and peevish you can be certain that it has worms. Give it White's Cream Vermifuge, guaranteed harmless. Expels the worms and puts the baby in a healthy normal condition. Sold by A. R. Fisher.

WHAT GRANDMA AND GRANDPA SAY IS TRUE.

They Say That Pe-ru-na is Good for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis and Catarrh.

Good Health at Seventy-Seven.

Mrs. S. J. Edwards, Union City, Tenn., writes under date of Nov. 7, 1904, the following:

"On the 5th day of February, 1905, if I live, I will be seventy-seven years of age. I enjoy the best of health, thanks to Peruna, and have not had a spell of sickness since I began using it five or six years ago."

"I consider it the grandest medicine on earth, and whenever I feel a little badly a few doses of Peruna put me right. I can do as much work as I could forty years ago. I think all old people, who feel the effects of age, should benefit their health by using Peruna."

Ill the Best Part of His Life.

Mr. J. R. Prince, R. R. 2, Cattaraugus, N. Y., writes: "I am not very well satisfied with the picture that I am sending you, but when the reader looks at this picture if he could only realize that the original suffered for forty-five years, the best of his life, until your kind advice and prescription cured him, he would know from whence those wrinkles came. Next month I shall be sixty-six years old."

Nervous Prostration.

Mrs. Martha Avery, 28 Graham St., Leominster, Mass., writes:

"Four years ago I had nervous prostration. I employed several doctors. One would say I had catarrh of the stomach and bowels, another nervousness and another enlargement of the liver. My stomach was in a bad shape."

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod Liver Oil is the means of life and enjoyment of life to thousands: men, women and children.

When appetite fails, it restores it. When food is a burden, it lifts the burden.

When you lose flesh, it brings the plumpness of health.

When work is hard and duty is heavy, it makes life bright.

It is the thin edge of the wedge; the thick end is food. But what is the use of food when you hate it and can't digest it?

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the food that makes you forget your stomach.

Eye-glass comfort depends on three conditions—Careful selection of lenses by an oculist, accurate grinding of lenses to the highest finish and accurate adjustment of the lenses to each eye. The latter important condition we consider this the most difficult for the general optician to attain, on account of the distance between the eyes and the shape and size of the nose vary in each individual. The ART of accurate fitting therefore becomes a scientific and mechanical combination, and in this ART I offer you the greatest inducements. Children's spectacles should be frequently adjusted to their eyes as their rapid growth demands it. This adjusting requires our careful attention. For consultation free call on Sam Englander. He will be at the Pate House from Nov. 2nd. to Nov. 14.

Allen Pierce has just recently finished his mechanical course at the Henderson Route shops and is now a full fledged machinist.

News came from Seelyville Rollie Fallon, a former Cloverport boy, is doing well at that place and has a good job.

Richard Sites has been promoted to General Passenger agent of the Henderson Route. His friends congratulate him upon his rapidity in climbing the ladder to success and he will keep on until he gets to the very top in the rail road business.

Allen C. Murray Dead
 Word was received Sunday of the death of Allen C. Murray which occurred at Portland, Oregon, last week. The remains were buried in that city October 28 by friends of the deceased. Mr. Murray was a former Cloverport boy and was the youngest son of the late John Allen Murray. He was a brother of Mrs. Morris Beard, and Mrs. L. Reeves, of Hardinsburg, and Mrs. Geo. Wolf of Louisville.

The news of Mr. Murray's death caused deep grief among his Cloverport friends and boyhood associates.

Having a Large Trade
 Mrs. James Cordrey was compelled to call in extra help in her trimming department last week. Her business has been unusually large this season, which is no doubt due to the excellent work of her trimmer, Miss Ashley. Mrs. Cordrey has increased her stock which gives the people a better opportunity for selecting their hats. Miss Ashley takes pleasure in showing you the new hair braids, hair rats, hair nets, veils, hat pins and other novelties just received from Cincinnati.

The Tobacco Situation.
 John E. Monarch reports fine progress in the pledging of tobacco. He says that district will sign up to a man. He wants all growers in the county outside the district to come in with them. He says there are quite a number of buyers who are anxious to bid on the holdings just as soon as samples can be shown.

SOCIETY NOTES.

The imps, the witches and the fairies were very active in Cloverport society Halloween and the mysterious night was full of bewitching hours for the young and the little ones.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Proctor Keith were host and hostess to a perfectly beautiful supper Saturday night at their home in the East End. Smiling Jack-o-lanterns illuminated the dining room with the assistance of a large candelabrum which occupied the center of the table. Many unique decorations were in evidence, among them the hand-made place cards. On every one was the menu and a picture representing the characteristics of each guest. Six elaborate courses were served and the entire meal was filled with enchantment. The guests were: Misses Ray Heyser, Anne Jarboe, Stella Weatherholt, Cleona Weatherholt, Pauline Moorman and Louise Babbage; Messrs. Lafe Behen, C. Brabant, Lawrence Murray and Mr. and Mrs. Ira Behen.

David Owen Hall was the guest of honor at a most entertaining Halloween party given to a number of guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Stader Saturday afternoon. A program of amusements was carried out and every minute of the time was one of exciting joy for those present. Three large pumpkins were filled with nuts and fruits, besides ices and cakes were served.

Thursday afternoon Master Leonard Weatherholt celebrated the fourth anniversary of his birthday by giving a party to a number of his friends and those of his brother, Forrest Dryden Weatherholt. The guests were entertained by a game of blind-fold, in which the girl's prize, a brooch, was won by Miss Edith Weisenberger and James Skillman was the winner of a box of chocolates. Dainty refreshments were served those present, who were: Eudaly Currie, Monnie and Vera Moorman, J. T. and Louise Lewis, Rachael Lewis, Forrest Gilliland, Will Warren and Cora Mae Seaton, Selby McCracken, Billy and Eleanor Reid, Edith and Walter Weisenberger, Ruby Haynes and Elizabeth Hook, Mary Pate and Wick and Joe D. Morrison.

Miss Jane Lightfoot was given a party Saturday afternoon at the home of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Forrest Lightfoot. This occasion was in honor of her birthday and Halloween was celebrated for the amusement of the guests. An old witch was conspicuous in the dining room where the little girls were treated to delicious refreshments and had their fortunes told. Those invited were: Addie and Mary McGowock, William Puk, Jennie Wills, Martha and Emily Reid, Ruby Haynes Hook, Elizabeth Hook, Lydia May English, Mary Owen Oelze, Jane Lightfoot and Louise Weatherholt.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen Kingsbury gave a most sumptuous dinner at their home Thursday evening at 6 o'clock. The guests were: Dr. Simmons, Mrs. Dunn, Mrs. McCall, Rev. and Mrs. Currie.

The Girls' Club will be entertained this afternoon at the home of Miss Louise Babbage and all the guests are requested to arrive promptly at 3 o'clock.

The Epworth League social committee entertain the members in the Methodist church parlors tomorrow evening.

The Ladies Reading Club meets tomorrow afternoon with Mrs. W. C. Moorman.

Mr. Wm. Hoffman celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his birthday by giving a state dinner at his home Friday night. The dinner was one of the largest and the best ever served to seven men in Cloverport. The Rev. Currie especially enjoyed the feast, for he had all the chicken that he could possibly eat and the other guests were equally complimentary with their favorite dishes. Plates were laid for Messrs. Henry Lewis, Fletcher Pauley, John Neubauer, Sam Furrow, Tom Faith, Rev. Currie and the host.

WAS DELIRIOUS WITH RHEUMATISM

On Chest, Back, and Head—Pain, Heat, and Tingling Were Excruciating—Nerves in Exhausted Condition—Sleep Badly Broken.

CURE BY CUTICURA SEEMED LIKE MAGIC

"Words cannot express the gratitude I feel for what Cuticura Remedies have done for my daughter. She is fifteen years of age, and had never had anything the matter with her skin until four months ago, when an eruption broke out on her chest. One night she awoke with a redness, and then followed thickening and blisters, which would break and run matter. I took her to a doctor, and he pronounced it to be eczema of a very bad form. He treated her with iodine and by checking the disease spread. It showed itself on her back, and then quickly spread upwards until the whole of her head was affected, and all her hair had to be cut. The pain she suffered was excruciating, and what with that and the heat and tingling her life was almost unbearable. She became run down in health, and at times was very feverish, languid, and drowsy, and occasionally she was delirious. Her nerves were in such a low state that she could not bear to be left alone. In spite of the cold weather she would insist on having her bedroom window open, and would lean out on the window sill to get some fresh air. One night she slept for many nights. The second doctor we tried afforded her just as little relief as the first, and I really do not know what we should have done if we had not read how Cuticura cured a similar case. I purchased Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Pills, and Cuticura Ointment, and before the ointment was three-quarters finished every trace of the disease was gone. It really seemed like magic. Her hair is coming again nicely, and I find it increases the growth wonderfully. Mrs. T. W. Hyde, 1, Orange Place, Brentwood, Essex, England, Mar. 8, 1907."

OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS

Together With Claims Allowed At October Term Breckenridge Fiscal Court, 1908.

At a Fiscal Court began and held in and for Breckenridge County, Ky., at the Court House in Hardinsburg, on October 6th, 1908.

Directions To Prepare Simple Yet Remarkable Home Mixture.

A well-known authority on Rheumatism gives the following valuable, though simple and harmless, prescription, which any one can easily prepare at home:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

He states that the ingredients can be obtained from any good prescription pharmacy at small cost, and, being of vegetable extraction, are harmless to take.

This pleasant mixture, if taken regularly for a few days, is said to overcome almost any case of Rheumatism. The pain and swelling, if any, diminishes with each dose, until permanent results are obtained, and without injuring the stomach. While there are many so-called Rheumatism remedies, patent medicines, etc., some of which do give relief, few really give permanent results, and the above will, no doubt, be greatly appreciated by many sufferers here at this time.

Inquiry at the drug stores of this neighborhood elicits the information that these drugs are harmless and can be bought separately, or the druggist here will mix the prescription for our readers if asked to.
